be frequently receive authorized requests for information from our medical files. It has been our practice to call the employee into the medical department, show him the request and explain what his authorization means. If the employee still wishes to have the contents of his medical file revealed, we have summarized the information and sent it to the insurance companies.

I feel that with proper authorization we can reveal the contents of our medical records when requested. This should be done, however, only when the employee, himself, is aware of the contents of the file and we should not divulge information which will result in unreasonable workmen's compensation claims.
