T. H. DAVISON, M.D. - Corporate Medical Director

In reviewing the records here at our Waukegan location I find that we have on file cases which have evidence of calcification of either the pleura or diaphragms or both without any restricted "flagging" of their records (i.e.: not designated as red cases).

I view of the changing climate in relation to pulmonary disease related to asbestos, I was wondering if perhaps we should either designate these cases as "red" cases, or perhaps an intermediate classification would be in order so that they would be restricted as to their dust exposure.
