CAUTION LABELS

Manufacturers of products which can be classed as combustible or flammable are being subjected to increasing legal pressures to place notices on their product containers warning the public of the hazardous nature of the contents. In addition to the penal provisions of state and local laws requiring caution labels, there are recent court decisions evidencing the trend to hold manufacturers liable for the public's losses if such warnings have been omitted from the labels.

Rules and regulations will be issued shortly by S. Collier, Director of Quality Control, setting forth the procedures to be followed with all products subject to such classification.
